Latin Roots Lesson 8

1. "Fervor" sounds kind of like "fever" – and their meanings are similar. Are they related? Explain. (You'll need to check the etymology of each word...www.etymonline.com is a good source.)
2. List three places where you might fraternize with someone.
3. What's the difference between something that is pending and something that is impending?
4. Homo sapiens means "human being," or, technically, "male human." What does homosexual mean?
5. What would the crime be called if you killed your sister?
6. Why do we refer to what happens in your lungs or sinuses during the flu as congestion...and we refer to freeway traffic as congestion as well?
7. In English, "congeries" stands out because it is a singular word with a plural appearance -- and its plural is also spelled "congeries." How does it make sense that this words comes from the same Latin root that creates the word congestion?

8. You're out to dinner with your family. Your two-year-old nephew starts freaking out because he wants to sit next to you at the table. His mother wants to mollify him. Come up with a helpful and appropriate solution.

9. Name three famous bellipotent world leaders.

10. What's something that makes you belligerent?

11. Describe a grave situation that DOESN'T relate to death or funerals or the like.

12. Name something you could do to aggravate a wound.

13. You can be a patron at a restaurant. If you think you're better or smarter than someone, you may patronize that person. How does it make sense that the same Latin root forms both of those words in those different contexts?
